Information asymmetry, agency problem, and shareholders wealth. Information asymmetry can be defined as a situation 1 whereby there is one party of the transaction having extra information as compared to other party. In other words, information asymmetry occurs because of inequalities in information accessibility and distribution. In financial market condition, information asymmetry is said to occur when the sellers (financial security issuer-i.e. company which issue shares and bonds) have more information about the product sold compared to the buyers (the investors). Agency problem on the other hand, refers to the problem that arises between agent and principal. In
